Chelsea Rose

Archaeologist, American

Bio:

Chelsea Rose is an historical archaeologist and adjunct faculty member at Southern Oregon University. Born and raised in northern California, Chelsea has been consumed with a love of history and archaeology from an early age. She focuses her research on the early settlement and development of the American West, and often invites students and the local community to join her on archaeological digs across the Pacific Northwest. Chelsea frequently works with the media on public archaeology projects, and starred in two seasons of the PBS archaeology series, Time Team America.

Education:

M.A. in Cultural Resource Management at Sonoma State University

B.A. in Anthropology at the University of Oregon

Media Experience:

Chelsea's media experience ranges from protagonist on-camera expert positions via Time Team America to regular radio and television interviews regarding her research in Oregon. Chelsea was a major content writer on the PBS Time Team America website, and she continues to actively promote archaeology through a monthly column in the Jacksonville Review, and frequent public speaking events.

Professional Experience:

Chelsea is an historical archaeologist who regularly publishes, and presents at academic conferences. She is research faculty at Southern Oregon University, and currently serves on the editorial board for the Oregon Historical Quarterly.
