

KLINT JANULIS

US SPECIAL FORCES VETERAN, COMBAT MEDIC,
SURVIVAL INSTRUCTOR & ARCHAEOLOGIST

BIO

Klint's impressive background includes experience as a former enlisted US Special Forces soldier, combat medic, and survival instructor with a background in palaeoanthropology and geology. He is applying his experience to archaeology to better understand the mind, technology, and hunting practices of prehistoric humans. In his academic work at the University of Oxford, where he is currently finishing his doctorate degree, he blends experimental archaeology with cognitive studies to understand the evolution of human cognition and intelligence.

EDUCATION

PhD (in progress), Archaeology, University of Oxford
BA, Anthropology/Archaeology, University of Colorado

MEDIA EXPERIENCE

Klint comes alive on screen and has a talent for relaying the epic tale of human experience in an accessible manner. Klint works as a logistics and prehistoric technology consultant. He is well known for his recent work as lead consultant and presenter in Channel 5's '10,000 B.C.', Mysteries of the Abandoned, as well as What On Earth. He has been interviewed by numerous media outlets and has hosted for both UK- and US-based television channels, including the History Channel and BBC History.

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Klint's research takes him across the globe, which allows him to use his experience with remote fieldwork and photography in a number of different archaeological applications, but his passion is food origins. His side research is into the prehistory of the diverse palate of ingredients, techniques and recipes available to the modern cook on which he is currently writing a book. In addition to his academic work Klint has recently published an award-winning, informational children's book on human prehistory for DK books.
